This is Fortune's 12th annual list of the 50 most powerful women in global business who not only preside over influential businesses, but also stand out in what remain male-dominated industries. The magazine ranked honorees based on the size, importance and health of their companies in the global economy; their career momentum; and their cultural and social influence. By changing the face of international business, these women also are helping change the world. Gri is ranked 42nd on the 2009 list, which was revealed today.

"Francoise's repeated recognition among the world's best and brightest women business leaders underscores her significant accomplishments at Manpower, as well as her contribution to the discussion of labor policy in the French market," said Jeff Joerres, Manpower Inc. Chairman and CEO. "Francoise not only brings tremendous energy and creativity to her role as president of our largest and most influential single market, but also prominence as an internationally recognized leader in the business services industry. We are convinced that diversity of thought, perspective and experience lead to a more sustainable, profitable company."

Gri joined Manpower Inc. in February of 2007 as President of Manpower France. Generating nearly $7 billion, more than a third of the global company's total revenue, she leads an organization of nearly 5,000 employees, across 840 offices serving over 90,000 clients annually. Gri is also leading the company's global initiative in furthering market position in the professional services segment of the industry.

Earlier this year, Gri was awarded with the Chevalier de l'Ordre National de la Legion d'Honneur Medal in recognition of her achievements as a leading businesswoman. This distinction is the French equivalent of being knighted. In 2003, she received the Chevalier de l'Ordre National du Merite (Order of Chivalry) from the then French Prime Minister Jean-Pierre Raffarin.

Gri serves as Vice-President of the French FACE Foundation (Foundation for Action to Combat Exclusion), a board director for STX Europe ASA and an active member of the Ethics Committee of the French Business Movement (MEDEF).

Prior to joining Manpower, Gri worked for IBM where she served, most recently, as President and Director General of its French and North African divisions.

Manpower's highest ranks are filled with contemporary women leaders. Today, as country managers, senior and executive vice presidents and board directors, women lead the way in many of Manpower's most influential management roles. Currently at Manpower, five out of 13 of the Executive Management Team and more than 40 percent of country managers worldwide are women. Earlier this month, Manpower was recognized as the only employment services firm named to PINK Magazine's "Top Companies for Women" list for the second consecutive year.
