Unveiling the new parent company name and logo in New York with a simultaneous unveiling of signage at the company's world headquarters in Milwaukee, Jeffrey A. Joerres, Chairman, CEO and President of ManpowerGroup, explains: "We are pioneering what it means to be an innovative workforce solutions company not only for our industry, but for the wider business services sector and ultimately for the benefit of our existing and future clients and candidates. We have an unmatched global footprint with local expertise and understanding of each market in which we work, and take a holistic view of the world of work — gained by interviewing more than 12 million people each year and working with hundreds of thousands of companies of all sizes globally. This insight means we have a deep understanding of human potential and are uniquely positioned to offer innovative workforce solutions that help organizations and individuals win."

Post-recession, everyone has had to adjust to the fact that there will be no economic reset to "normal." Doing more with less has become the reality, and, for employers, business growth will now come from having access to talent rather than access to capital. ManpowerGroup has been monitoring the macro-economic forces and trends impacting the world of work for many years and this led the organization to uniquely identify a new world era at the World Economic Forum Annual Meeting in Davos earlier this year: the Human Age. This is the first age to be identified before the end of its era and represents a time when people themselves are beginning to take center stage, and unleashing human potential is becoming the key building block of growth. This evolution of the Manpower Inc. brand is designed to respond to this new world era, and marks the next chapter for a company that has pioneered what it means to deploy innovative workforce solutions.

Today's talent shortage and mismatch — in which employers are eager to hire the right talent, but can't identify the right candidates — demand a holistic global solutions provider, as ManpowerGroup research continues to reveal worldwide.

"We recognize that in order to successfully unleash the passion and potential of their workforce, employers need solutions that are tailored to their needs," adds Joerres.

To reflect this new reality, strengthen and better articulate its family of brands and suite of solutions, the company is differentiating its organization in a way that clearly defines what each of the ManpowerGroup brands stand for individually, while also strengthening the combined assets, that makes it easier to provide clients with dynamic and flexible solutions across the ManpowerGroup.

"We continue to evolve ourselves, anticipating the ever-increasing sophistication and needs of our clients, and developing a robust suite of innovative workforce solutions that are operationally grounded and strategically confront the complexity of the Human Age. As a company, we have seen this coming, we understand the challenge and we are ready to serve clients with the strongest suite of services and solutions in the industry," said Joerres.
